

- Plot points
 - Bandits j chillin
 - Goblins have been raided
 - Church to water deity has been raided
- Descriptors of the town
 - large statue of water deity (nayami)
- Buildings
 - The tree trunk
 - Church
 - Marketplace for food
- Will and Esmeralda
 - Harry (human)
 - Kids : will and Esmeralda
 - Stone mason
 - Leo
 - Belgren
-

Belgren is a small town just below the fork of the river that splits the desert. It is welcome to fey and human folk alike and rarely sees trouble with its surroundings. A large statue of a woman creating a break in violent waves of stone. The growing issue of the drought has created numerous issues. Not only does this years harvest look light, friction between the people of the town and a local goblin village, and a group of seedy characters from the desert have made their way into town. Until now disputes have been resolved diplomatically with no bloodshed. However, that is about to change. Holy buildings in both towns have been raided and ransacked. Each community believes that the other is responsible for the attacks and a summit will be held the day after our party arrives. The trouble is there is likely to be no peace if the items are not returned to their rightful owners and the identity of the marauders seems to be a mystery. The religious artifacts lie in the possession of a lean dragonborn man that led the travellers into belgren to begin with. This stop is one of many on his violent campaign across the rainforest to eradicate the hope of rain ever coming to this forest again.